

RUNAWAY GIRL FOUND

WITH PHOTO OF ARBUCKLE
COLLEGE SPRINGS, Iowa, Sept. 20.—Ada Gillfillan, sixteen years old, a farmer's daughter, has been found in a straw stack eighteen miles from home. She had been without food and water for three days.

"Fatty" Arbuckle was her film favorite. She had pictures of him in her room. She said her mother whipped her when she refused to take them down. So she ran away from home.

When found in a semi-conscious condition she had a picture of Arbuckle clasped tightly to her chest.

MAN DYING, BUT LANDLORD HELD BACK HOT WATER

N. Y. Judge Calls Apartment Owner Disgrace to Community by Selfishness.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Samuel Josephson, landlord of the two-family home in the Bronx, was yesterday held in bail of $1,000 by Magistrate Simpson in Morrisania court. Josephson was charged with failing to provide hot water for the family of Benjamin Shelman, tenants in his house. The magistrate said to Josephson:

"You are a disgrace to the landlords of this community. You are a profiteer of the worst kind to charge for seven rooms and to provide no hot water, with a man dying upstairs. You're the kind of a landlord that makes these laws necessary."

Shelman testified that for three months he had tried unsuccessfully to get hot water so that his father, Joseph, sixty-eight, who was seriously ill, could be bathed in accordance with directions of his doctor. The father died September 3.

On this day, it was said, the landlord declared in answer to a request for hot water:

"I'll provide it when the son dies." It was testified that an inspection of the place on August 22 showed that there were eight tons of coal in the cellar.

Prout fell through the ropes in the fourth round, fracturing his skull on the floor.

MEDBURY

Says Since the Prohibition Officers Are Pouring Liquor in the Gutter a Tenant Doesn't Mind Being Put Out on the Street

By John P. Medbury

Since the United States Flying Squadron has started pouring liquor in the street, many a man has jolped the curb market.

People used to stand on the corner and wait for the parade to march by. Now they wait for the liquor to flow past.

The street sweepers have sold their brooms and bought sponges.

Many a man who isn't a miser is out looking for quartz.

The prohibition officers used to follow the bootleggers. Now the bootleggers follow the prohibition officers.

Lots of men who never cared for birds now stand on the curb watching for swallows.

Fathers used to tell their kids to keep out of the street. Now they're out in the street themselves.

You used to speak of the breadth of the road. Now it's the breadth of the curb.

Prohibition delivers liquor to your house F. O. B. curb.

The Government ought to furnish you with time tables so you'd know what time the gin was going to pass your residence.

You'd call up the prohibition office and say, "What's the matter? I've been standing for three hours and my beer hasn't come yet."

Then they'd say: "We're going to raid a place at 2:45, pour it in the street at 3:30 and it ought to be passing your place at 4:10."

You'd ask a man where Mr. Smith lives, and he'd say: "Four blocks as the Old Crow flies."

He'll tell you to walk one block until you come to beer, turn to your left until you run into whiskey and then walk straight ahead until you get to champagne.

An optimist is a man who stands on the curb waiting for some ten-year-old stuff to flow by.

But after sampling it he realizes it's too young to be out in the street.

MRS. STOKES IS JOYFUL AT NEWS OF SEPARATION

Custody of Children All That Made Any Difference, She Says.

DENVER, Sept. 20.—"Och!"

The exclamation more a deep sigh than a note of triumph, came from the lips of Mrs. Stokes, when she was told of the decision giving her a separation from her husband.

She had just sat down in her mother's drawing room for her morning's lessons in literature and history when the news was told her.

"I knew it must go this way," she said.

When told the court had awarded her custody of the children, she said: "That's really all that matters or has mattered. I could endure to have people think wrong of me and to believe what they liked. But the thought of giving up my children or of sharing them has hung over me like a nightmare."

What her plans are for the future or the immediate present, Mrs. Stokes declined to reveal until she receives word direct from her attorney.

Asked what financial provisions had been made by Stokes for herself and children, Mrs. Stokes said: "The question of money was not raised in the trial just closed. Now that the decision is given, I shall ask my attorneys to make a request for a suitable income for myself and the children."

The total cost of the armies comes to nearly $500,000,000. The reparations, worked out according to the average of exchange values over the last three years. The commission is shortly to meet in Brussels to discuss the matter and fix the cost in German gold marks.

CORONER DOUBTS GIRL'S TALE SHE SLEW FATHER

CARROLLTON, Miss., Sept. 20.—The preliminary hearing of Nora Bert Schruggs, the eighteen-year-old girl held in jail here on her confession that she slew her father, Charles Schruggs, has been set for Thursday. Miss Schruggs is suffering from a nervous breakdown.

The prominence of the family, the girl's personal popularity, and the verdict of the coroner's jury, which held that her confession was made to shield another, and that she is innocent, have attracted wide attention to the case.

Schruggs was slain in his sleep, the top of his head being blown off with a small gauge shotgun. The coroner's jury found evidence that he had been dealt several blows with a blunt instrument.

SUPREME COUNCIL SEES NEW MASONIC DEGREE

BOSTON, Sept. 20.—Members of the Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masons, here for the annual meeting of the northern jurisdiction, opening today, were guests of the Massachusetts Consistory last night at the working of the twentieth degree under a new ritual, the adoption of which is under consideration.

The work under the proposed revision is based on early American history rather than on European history, as in the present ritual.

BUTCHER WHO SLEW 20 GIRLS PROUD OF WORK

German Fiend Re-enacts Dissection of Victims for Police.

BERLIN, Sept. 20.—"How should I know by any time 'what her? Why don't you cut the wounds—they'll show!'"

At Berlin's main morgue, with the body of his latest victim spread before him on a slab, "Butcher" Karl Grossman confessed slayer of twenty girls, whose bodies he dissected for "veal steak" and "sausages," which he sold to the poor in darkest Berlin, thus sneeringly responded.

Shows No Remorse.

Even now that he has confessed the fiend feels not the slightest pang of remorse; nor does he fear conviction and punishment at the trial which is drawing near.

They made him demonstrate upon the bruised and battered body of Frieda Schubert how he tied her hand and foot to the bed posts. He did it calmly, painstakingly, with apparent pride in his handiwork. Indeed, it was his vanity as an expert, a "superficial" that made him finally confess after weeks of sullen silence.

The police would place together shreds of evidence and tell him "how he did it." He would suddenly interrupt them and almost indignantly tell them that he wasn't "that kind of an amateur." Thus, bit by bit, they got the whole gruesome story out of him.

Caught at "Dissection" Bench.

Frieda Schubert, his last victim, was just slated for the dissecting bench in his dingy room on the fourth floor of a tenement house near the Silesian station when the police caught Grossman in the act. He had bound, gagged and clubbed her to death.

Grossman is an emaciated little man, past sixty. He is literally in rags. Several naked toes protrude from torn, crimson-stained shoes. His appearance strikes one as grotesque when one recalls the testimony of many witnesses that he had the reputation of a sport—especially among the women of the street, from whose ranks he recruited most of his victims.

That "fame" he derived from the fact that he always carried a respectable bundle of pills, and they looked good to the half-starved, delirious of the underworld who saw in this queer old man an "angel" and followed him to his den, whence few ever appeared alive.

Women Tell of Torture.

"Butcher" Grossman's stock-in-trade with women was that he needed a housekeeper. Some of them loved for him in that capacity for months before he put them to death, though his stories show he put them through a course of tortures from the moment he had closed the door of his den. Girls and women have come forward, in response to police appeals, and told of living such a life of agony—for the money that they thought was in it—until by some ruse they escaped the final act.

Prof. Strauch, noted scientist, who has made a microscopic examination of virtually every atom of filth and refuse in the slaughter room, has found among the mixture of ashes and rags and food debris piled in one corner, the charred remnants of the two human hands that belonged to different women. He also has found several pieces of burned ribs. Stays that were parts of different corsets and other fragments of women's wear also were discovered in the ghastly pile.
